USPA NEWS - The 38th Goya Awards crowned 'La sociedad de la nieve' as best film; Juan Antonio Bayona as best director, and David Verdaguer and Malena Alterio as best actor and best actress respectively. The Spanish Film Academy also awarded the International Goya to the American actress Sigourney Weaver. The award for the Best Latin-American Film was for 'La memoria infinita' from Chile.

The gala was presented by the actress and singer Ana Belén. This year, the Spanish Film Academy chose Valladolid, capital of the region of Castilla y León, for the big night of the Spanish cinema. From the afternoon, hundreds of citizens met around the Fair of Valladolid to see the Spanish movie stars. The red carpet discovered strange dresses, provocative looks and only a bit of elegance in the guests at the party. It was feared that the farmers, who have been protesting their working conditions for a week, would sabotage the gala, but a large police deployment kept them away from the Fair of Valladolid. Only a few whistles and shouts among the public gathered along the red carpet brought the farmers' protest to the big night of the Spanish cinema.

Inside the Fair, the night of the Spanish cinema took place without incident. The American actress Sigourney Weaver, three-time Oscar nominated and winner of the BAFTA and the Golden Globe, was awarded with the third International Goya in the history "for her impressive career full of unforgettable and inspiring films, creating complex and strong female characters." According to the Spanish Film Academy, Weaver's eclectic work "is a reflection of her versatility, charisma and undeniable talent as an actress."

Mixing the Spanish language with English, Sigourney Weaver said she felt a "deep honor to be here tonight with all of you and receive this award. I am filled with gratitude to receive recognition from a country that has produced so many masterpieces." Regarding her career, the American actress assured that "I have had a wonderful time and I have met some monsters. Always looking for stories about and for women that remind us how powerful we are." She pointed out that "when I think of Spanish cinema, I always think of excellence." Remembering great directors like Luis Buñuel, Weaver said that "being honored by you means a lot to me."
