It has been eight years since super-soldier Jason Bourne disappeared at the end of 2007's "The Bourne Ultimatum". "The Bourne Legacy" continued the franchise with a new character and a new star (Jeremy Renner) in 2012, but soon, Matt Damon will start production of the fourth film featuring Jason Bourne, due out in July 2016.

The landscape has changed since, and now the Oscar-winning actor has confirmed he will be back for the next Bourne chapter, along with Paul Greengrass as Director. The untitled Next Bourne chapter is locked in for a July 5, 2016 release date, but there remains the question regarding what that means for the future of Jeremy Renner's Bourne character, Aaron Cross.

We can maybe bet on that we will either get a Renner-centric Bourne movie at another point in the future, or Renner's character will be joining up with Matt Damon's in the next film.

"Without giving too much of it away, it's Bourne through an austerity-riddled Europe and in a post-snowden world... It seems like enough has changed, you know ? There are all these kinds of arguments about spying and civil liberties and the nature of democracy...We're starting in Greece, you know, the beginning of democracy. And the movie ends in Las Vegas, the most grotesque incarnation of..." said Matt Damon to BuzzFeed.
